VINEYARD OF NABOTH

REV. DR. GILBERT DISCUSSES JEZE. SEL'S CRIME.

How a Wicked Woman Secured for Weak King a Rich Patrimony by Bribery, Perjury and Assassination.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON for July 31.
Neboth's Vineyard. I. Kings, xxi:4-16.
By J. E. Gilbert, D. D., LL. D., Secretary of American Society of Religious Education. INTRODUCTION. Probably six years intervened between the visit of Elijah to Mount Horeb, and the events of to-day's lesson. During that time Elisha had become a folower and disciple of Elijah. Ben hadad had besieged Samaria and had been defeated. Peace being restored, notwithstanding the interposition and warning of God, Ahab soon returned to the vices of his luxurious life and strengthened him self more and more in his wickedness. His lust of gain, his disregard of the rights of others, his inflamed conceit, found expression in even the trivial affairs of every day occurrence, and Jezebel proved his evil genius, induging his whims, ministering to his passions, and gratifying his ambitions. The passage before us is a disclosure of the man on one of his worst sides. It was bad enough for him to marry a heathen woman. It was infinitely worse under her dictation to become an idolator, and to lead the nation in the worship of strange gods. We shall now see that he fell into the lowest depths of unmanly weakness, and deserved to be only despised by his own people.

and deserved to be only despised by his own people.

DEJECTION. Our lesson opens with a strange scene—the king is in bed, his face turned to the wall, refusing to eat, heavy hearted, offended (verse 4). And why? It appears that hard by the palace was a vineyard owned by Naboth, a man of considerable importance, no doubt, as otherwise he would not have possessions in that locality. Ahad proposed to purchase, but the offer was refused. Naboth was unwilling to allenate an inheritance. Indeed, there was a prohibition in the divine law against it. He might sell or mortgage, but in the jubilee it would revert (Leviticus xxv:lv.) The refusal was displeasing to the king, not merely because he failed to obtain by purchase what he coveted, nor yet because one presumed to resist his will but because the sailed to resist his because one presumed to resist his but because the old law stood in his He had found himself several times ace to face with the legislation of Moser will, but because the old law stood in his way. He had found himself several times face to face with the legislation of Moses, bound by regulations that he could not violate with impunity. Ahab went home in a rage, dejected, dissatisfied with the whole economy of government handed down to him, which limited his authority and compelled him to respect the property rights of others. It was a stubborn resistance against God.

INQUIRY. In a short time Jezebel appeared in the king's chamber, to learn the cause of his sudden dejection of spirit (verse 5). This was both her privilege and duty. Woman never appears to better advantage than when she assists those in distress. To her own husband she has a ministry at such a time which no other can render. There are not many men whose wives have not sustained them in trying hours and made them strong to bear or overcome. It has been said that never does a man do a great thing but a woman is near to advise. Of course, Ahab explained the situation (verse 6). It is a peculiar fact that when a man gets the dumps he looks for someone to whom he may speak, and he generally finds relief in speaking. In this instance it was useless to try to be silent, for the king had sold himself out and dared not resist the imperious will of Jezebel, who was a stronger character than he. It is quite probable, moreover, that, knowing by former experiences, how resourceful she was, he expected she would, as she did, find some way out of the trouble. Indeed, he may have gone to bed, expecting she would come to his rellef.

CONTEMPT. A headstrong woman makes her husband weakminded, compels him to serve ber, and then despises him on every exhibition of weakness. The surprise felt by Jezebel on entering the king's chamber was soon turned to disgust and indignation as she heard his words and considered his unmanly conduct. In strong, hot words she upbraided him. "Are you a king? Do you behave like one (verse 7)?" She probably had in mind the absolute authority exercised by her father and the heathen ru monarchy, that its sovereign was under law no less than the subjects, that the law no less than the subjects, that the law was of divine origin. Or, if she understood this, she would have Ahab know that such royalty was of little worth, and that he ought to desire something better. Having thus reproached, she commanded him to rise from his couch, to eat and to be merry. That was her idea of life. That was the ieda of the whole ancient world, and it is the idea of the whole modern world outside of religious conviction. Have a good timeli enjoy yourself," that is the counsel of a godless heart (Luke xii:19). It is the carnal triumphing over the spiritual. To induce him to accept her advice she promised to give him the vineyard of Naboth. This hope might well cheer the king.

ORDERS, Jezebel was true to her promise. In the depths of her wicked heart she ORDERS. Jezebel was true to her promise. In the depths of her wicked heart she conceived a diabolical plot and proceeded to execute it. To avoid popular indignation she determined to use the forms of law and justice, and appear as the patron of righteousness. To the elders and nobles dwelling in the city she wrote letters, using Ahab's name and seal, which probably he allowed her to use when she pleased (verse 8). In these letters she represented that Naboth was guilty of a great offense, which must be explated to avert the divine judgment upon the nation. Hence, she ordered the elders to call a public fast (Isa. lvilli:3) for humiliation before God, an act viii:3) for humiliation before God, an act which she had reason to believe would be approved by all godly men. In that fast Naboth must be set in a conspicuous place among the people (verse 9) that he might be seen by all. Private instructions were among the people (verse 9) that he might be seen by all. Private instructions were given to trusted servants that men of Belial should be procured (Deut, xiii:13), men free from the restraints of conscience, who, at the proper time, should come forth and testify that Naboth had blasphemed God and the king (verse 10). As this offense was punishable with death (Lev. xxiv:14) the man would disappear and his estate he confiscated. estate be confiscated.

RESPONSE. The elders and nobles must

RESPONSE. The elders and nobles must have been surprised when they received those letters. Naboth, their neighbor, had maintained a good name among them, and was free from all suspicion. They might have protected him, as was their duty to do in case of his innocence, for, notwithstanding the government was monarchical in form, the elders still exercised great authority, which they had inherited from the very beginning of national life (Ex., iii:16), an authority which even Jezebel felt compelled to respect. But if Naboth was guitty these men were the last to was guilty these men were the last to shield him, for in that case they would have been parties to the crime. That was the glory of Israel, all through its history, that the elders sought to enforce law. Besides, the call of the king was intended as a method to determine the guilt or innocence of the accused. Furthermore, to refuse the proclamation would be a neglect of their duty, giving occasion for extending the control of their duty, giving occasion for extending the same control of their duty. nocence of the accused. Furthermore, to refuse the proclamation would be a neglect of their duty, giving occasion for subsequent encroachment by the king upon their privilege, and might also expose them to his ill-will. They therefore resolved to proclaim the fast, to set Nadoth on high, and to conform to all customs imposed when any great matter of state was to be determined. wherein the question of right-TRIAL. The elders made their announcement that a great offense had been committed, and that the people must fast and pray to deliver themselves from judgment. Naboth was brought forth as a culprit and seated in the prisoner's box in the gate. Venerable men, elders of the city, were summoned to sit in the case, the jurymen of those days. The sorthe read with solemn voice the accusation. Then came the two hirelings, men ready to do for money any dirty work, and took their seats in places assigned for witnesses. When all was silent they testified that Naboth had blasphemed. That was enough. Two witnesses were sufficient in those days to establish any matter (Deut, xvil:5). There was no examination or rebuttal. The practice in the courts of Israel was very simple, and liable to result in injustice. There may have been a pleading. But the verdict was soon rendered, and there was no delay in the execution. Naboth was taken outside the city, and stoned that he died (verses 12 and 14). The scribe made the entry in the public records, and the crowds dispersed, reflecting upon the fact that another blasphemer had justly suffered, and that God's wrath would be turned away.

POSSESSION. Those who had been charged with this helley between a plead-had justly suffered, and that God's wrath would be turned away.

POSSESSION. Those who had been charged with this hellish business reported afterward to Jezebel, who had ordered it (verse 14). With that information she sought out her husband, the pitiful weaking, and directed him to take the possession which he was unable to purchase, because its owner had died as a blasphemer, and because the property now belonged to the throne (verse 15). She had fulfilled her promise, but at a fearful cost.

Through falsehood and bribery, through corruption of courts and perversion of jus-tice, she had committed murder, stained the name of a good man, deprived the comctiraption of courts and perversion of justice, she had committed murder, stained the name of a good man, deprived the community of a valuable citizen, and all this with hypocritical professions of love for the sanctity of the law and a disposition to punish law-breakers. And Ahab, perhaps ignorant of the facts, perhaps indifferent to the deeds of blood if aware of them, rose up from the feast, where, by his wife's direction his heart had been made merry, and went down toward the vineyard, late another's, now supposed to be his (verse 15). But the eye of God had witnessed this transaction, and the prophet was sent to meet King Ahab in the way and pronounce his doom (verse 19).

REFLECTIONS. This lesson shows how necessary righteousness is to the security and enjoyment of earthly good. Naboth's vineyard was dear to him. Of its fruits he expected to partake, as his ancestors had done, until the close of life, and at death he proposed to leave it to his children. Its possession was guaranteed to him by the law of God. Because of that law he was able to stand up like a man and say to the king, "The Lord forbid that I should give thee the inheritence of my fathers." He had a right greater than that of any subject in any heathen land. And yet through the covetousness of a weak king, the hypocrisy and iniquity of a tyrannical woman, and the perjury of two base hirelings, Naboth's rights are trampled upon, his good name is assailed, his family is bereaved, his wife is made a widow and his children orphans, and a pile of stones outside the city gate tells the passerby that he perished as a criminal. He who lives near the wicked may discount all his treasures. Good government is impossible in the hands of bad officers. Every evil treasures. Good government is impossible in the hands of bad officers. Every evil thought is a menace to every worldly

TEACHERS VISIT THE CITY. Public Instructors From St. Clair County Take in Points of Interest. Under the escort of Judges Gill and Nevitt-the St. Clair county judges who are confined in the county jail for contempt of the federal court-seventy-one school teachers of that county who visited the city yesterday were shown the interest ing sights of the jail. A special courtesy was granted the judges on this occasion, and they were allowed to go to the depot to welcome their neighbors and friends. The school teachers were much interested in the quarters occupied by the judges They were conducted through the entire building, and were evidently keenly interested in everything they saw.

"My, but this must be a bad city," exclaimed one bright eyed miss, as she peered through the bars into the cell corridor. 'Are all those men murderers?' When she was informed that the great majority of the prisoners were serving time for petty thefts and for lighting, her when she was informed that the great majority of the prisoners were serving time for petty thefts and for fighting, her interest largely faded away, and a disappointed air took its place.

"But aren't there any who are really murderers?" she inquired of Jailer Lum Wilson, who was doing the honors.

"Well, miss," returned the jailer, with a smile, "there are a number who we think are murderers, but it's pretty hard to tell a murderer in Kansas City."

As the party reached the second tier of cells, they were individually introduced to John Kennedy, who was cleanly shaven, wore a neat pink shirt, collar and necktie, and otherwise presented an altogether natty appearance. He talked freely with the party, and it was a hard matter to get them away from his cell. The women were much astonished at his appearance.

"Goodness me," exclaimed one of them, "from what I've read of that man I thought he was a most villainous looking person. Why, he's real nice looking. A train robber and a murderer? No, I don't believe it. He might be a train robber, but I don't think that anybody could persuade me that he is a murderer."

A most peculiar feature of the visit was that while all of the women pitied the men prisoners, and did not hesitate to say so, when they came to the prisoners of their own sex, few expressions of sympathy were heard.

They were shown the new cell room, which is just about ready for occupancy, and were then escorted into the southwest room, where the old gallows has been erected. They gazed upon this gruesome wooden structure with awe, and said not a word as they filed out into the office

And then the bright faced young miss evidently voiced the sentiments of the crowd by saying, as she drew 1 long breath, "My, what a difference there is between the free air and the jail air."

The teachers also visited the public library, the city hall, the packing houses and The Journal office.

MANY WOMEN WANT TO GO. More Applicants Than Can Be Provided For at the Salvation Army's

Fresh Air Camp. The third week of the Salvation Army's Fresh Air camp at Fairmount park com mences to-day and one-half of the camp ers will be brought back to the city to make room for fifteen other women, wh will be taken to the park for a week's outing. Last night twenty-seven poor wom en, with about forty children, comprise the camp. In addition to the large num who have already availed themselves of the privileges offered by the Army, Brigadier Stillwell has on his desk applications from seventy others who destre to indulge in the pleasure of camp life. At the rate at which applications are now being received it may be necessary to extend the time in which the camp will be continued beyond the six weeks originally intended, although the officers say that the money donations received thus far will not warrant them in making an announcement to that effect at this time.

Several cases of extreme destitution were brought to light through the investigations of the Army workers. Yesterday an Arabian woman who was among last year's campers was found at her home in the North end, living in the most abject poverty, and it was found necessary to provide complete sets of clothing for her and her young babe before she could be removed from her home. Many other cases are similar to this, and the women in the Army are being kept busy making dresses for the poor who have not clothing enough to be taken to the park.

Every provision is made for the comfort and pleasure of the women, who, while in camp, live in comparative luxury. Ensign of the privileges offered by the Army Brigadier Stillwell has on his desk appli Every provision is made for the comfort and pleasure of the women, who, while in camp, live in comparative luxury. Ensign and Mrs. Dodds, and their assistants, perform all the laborious duties necessary for the operation of the tented city, and the women guests spend the whole time in rest, while the children romp about as they please. The Army is considering the advisability of instituting a series of religious meetings at the park, and if the consent of the park management can be secured daily services for women will probably be commenced. In the meantime the women and children from the tenement districts are enjoying an outing at a summer resort not far from home at the expense of the workers in the Salvation Army and the generously inclined people of the city.

When their cases were reached the courtroom was crowded with the defendants and their friends. Mandle had about twenty witnesses who were ready to swear that the Bucher children were the noisiest in all Missouri, and Bucher had an equal number of trustworthy citizens who would testify that they were the quietest and best behaved children they had ever known.

Judge Burnham, after glancing at the array of witnesses and briefly studying the thermometer, continued the case for ten days. If during that time hostilities are renewed, prosecution will follow, but if the dove of peace hovers over the Mandle and Bucher households the complaints will be pigeonholed.

DIED IN A DOCTOR'S OFFICE.

Miss Laura Hall Suddenly Expires While Being Treated for an Abscess.

Miss Laura B. Hall, 22 years old, died suddenly in the office of Dr. J. W. Perkins, 409 Altman building, yesterday afternoon from the effects of an abscess of the lungs. She had been suffering for about four months with the disease, but had spent a month at All Saints' hospital early in the summer and was thought to be getting well. She went daily to the doctor's office for treatment, and when she left her home yesterday she appeared to be about as well as usual.

Miss Hall came to Kanga Chy with her as well as usual.

Miss Hall came to Kansas City with her mother, Mrs. Bell Hall, and her brother, James, from Los Angeles. Cal., about a year ago, and had since lived at 301 East Eleventh street. She was the bookkeeper and cashier at the Corle oatmeal mill. Her brother. James Hall, is employed as a clerk in the wholesale department of Streicher's jewelry house.

of the Gilson Company. George P. Hardesty, of the board of public works, and City Engineer Wise yes terday made a tour of inspection of the new asphalt pavement just laid by the Gilson Company, on Holmes street from Fifteenth to Nineteenth streets, and on Gladstone avenue. The surface is badly crumbled, but the city engineer will wait for a few weeks to see the effect of the weather before taking any action. He expressed the opinion that the excessive heat at the time of laying is responsible for the present condition of the pavement and that the latter will be all right. The company is relaying three blocks of the Nineteenth street pavement east of Holmes. The Broadway pavement is ap-parently all right.

HE JUST WANTED TO GO.

How L. D. Thatcher's Name Came to Be Enrolled in the List of the Mysteriously Missing.

L. D. Thatcher, a barber, of 626 Charlotte street, now wishes that he had notified his wife of his intended journey to Leaven-worth. He left his home Thursday morning, and, after twenty-four hours had passed without his returning, his wife reported him to the police as missing. Three hours later he returned to his home and was there found by a reporter of The Journal.

was there found by a reporter of The Journal.

"I just wanted to go to Leavenworth," said he, "and I went."

"Have a good time?"

"No; I can't say that I did."

"What was the trouble, heat or—"

"Overcome by the heat' is as good an excuse as any," he laughingly replied.

"You can laugh," said his wife, "but I haven't got over my 'mad' yet."

"But you will, my dear," he replied, soothingly, and then his wife relented and her eyes fairly beamed as she gazed at her recreant spouse.

THE NEWS AT LEAVENWORTH. WHERE MEASLES IS FEARED. Partnership Differences Taken Into Frightful Mortality Caused by the Court-Paying the War Tax-

District Court.

District Court.

For more than a year past differences have existed between members of the firm of Ettenson, Woolfe & Co., which yesterday resulted in a suit being filed in the district court. The suit is brought by B. B. Woolfe, a brother-in-law of Mr. Ettenson, the senior partner, and Edward Winnig, the third member, against Henry Ettenson and Mart Thomas, a clerk. The petition states that the partnership was formed July 22, 1822, and that Henry Ettenson and B. B. Woolfe each owned fortytwo and one-half of the business, the other 15 per cent being owned by Edward Winnig. The petition cites that, owing to the varied private interests of Mr. Ettenson, Mr. Woolfe has been the managing partner and has employed and discharged the clerks, Mr. Ettenson giving but little attention to the business. July 27 Mr. Woolfe discharged a clerk named Mart Thomas, but he asserted he had been hired by Mr. Ettenson and refused to acknowledge Mr. Woolfe's authority. The petition alleges that Thomas threatened to brain Mr. Woolfe for interfering with his presence at the store.

The plaintiffs asked for a restraining order to compel Thomas to keep away from the house and to restrain Mr. Ettenson from interfering with the employees of the firm. The petition was considered in chambers by Judge Myers, who granted the order.

The plaintiffs assert as a cause of differ-

The plaintiffs assert as a cause of difference between the partners that Mr. Ettenson was refused permission to advertise the Excelsior Springs hotel and bottling works in the firm's catalogue issued last year. It also states that when Mr. Ettenson gave a barbecue last fall, on the occasion of the completion of his country residence, he wanted the expense charged up to the firm, which was refused.

The firm is the largest in the city, having many departments under one roof, and is doing a large business. It has long been known that a difference of opinion existed between the partners, and the filing of the suit caused but little surprise. The members of the firm were out of the city last evening and could not be seen, but it is probable that other suits will yet be filed.

Judge Myers returned from Valley Falls and presided in the district court yesterday. Lewis Luce, who was convicted of criminal assault, was brought into court and sentenced to the reformatory. Judgments were granted against the county as follows: F. G. Markart, $452.22; W. H. Wulfekuhler, $2.357.51, and Robert Beverage, $32.50.

The following new suits were filed: R. J. Garrett and Company, against the board of county commissioners, $817; A. J. Flintjar against Jacob Gaiser, $155, for commission on sale of a farm, and Otto Schmeckel against Charles Espenscheld, to have the injunction obtained against him set aside. The claim of R. Garrett & Co. was one assigned the firm by the Evergreen hospital, and was for care of insane patients. Verden Jones filed a suit for divorce against Robert Jones, charging extreme cruelty and abandonment. She alleges he threatened to kill her. They were married in this county June 1, 1892, and have one child, of which the plantiff wants the custody.

A letter yesterday from Camp Merritt states that the Twentieth Kansas appear states that the Twentieth Kansas appear to be no nearer getting away than ever. The boys are now taking the matter philosophically and are ready for any contingency. The writer states that it was believed that the authorities thought too much of the Kansas boys to send them away to get killed by an enemy's fire, but would prefer to have any deaths which might occur take place at the camp. There had been a great deal of sickness in camp, and some of the Leavenworth boys were just getting out of the hospital, but most of the sickness had resulted from colds or the change of climate. The weather was peculiar, and could hardly be appreciated by the Kansas men. At times it was so hot as to be almost unberable, and again it was cold enough to wear overcoats. it was cold enough to wear overcoats

Disease in South Pacific Islands.

From the New York Sun.

There have been some cases of measles among the American soldiers now at Ma-nila, but that will not make any difference to the army. It will go about its duty

There have been some cases of measles among the American solders now at Manilla, but that will not make any difference to the army. It will go about its duty and will occupy the Philippines and any other archipelagoes of the Pacific which it may seem good to the administration to take charge of. It would be a different matter if the expedition were a pleasure cruise. The first case of measles would bring the cruise to an end. To a vessel with even a single case of this disease there would not be a port open in the troplical Pacific.

With the communities of the temperate zone measles is accepted and tolerated as one of the many indignities connected with childhood. If a grown man has the fever and the rash he becomes the source of mirth in others, and is laughed at by his comrades because he has not yet concluded his infancy. Out in the Pacific measles is no laughing matter, but is regarded as health officials look upon cholera and the plague, both because of its high degree of contagiousness and the large percentage of mortality among its victims. The two competing lines of steamships between America and the Australian continent grumble loudiy at being forced to manage their traffic in accordance with a theory which places measles in the same order of quarantinable offenses as smallpox. More than once it has happened that the steamers have been quarantined at Honolulu or Suva or Apia, all because some baby has had this disorder.

In 1874, after the British government had annexed the Fiji islands, a war vessel was detailed to take King Cakoban and a batch of high chiefs on an educational cruise which should show them the magnitude of the British empire as displayed at Sydney. Unfortunately the perty on its return to Fiji brought the contagion of measles. The pest spread with terrifying rapidity from island to island, and attacked all ages. There was only one medical man in the group, and he could not begin to take care of the dangerous cases in Levuka, and as for the hundreds of other islands away from Ovaliau
